A Greeting from the New Consul General

I'd like to take this opportunity to greet the American citizens residing in Chennai's consular district. Some of the most important work that we do here at the Consulate relates to the support of Americans living and traveling in India. I am anticipating learning more about the vibrant community of more than 38,000 kids, adults and elderly Americans in the three states and Pondicherry. My team and I look forward to serving you, and to helping you in times of need, throughout my next three years serving in India.

The Exquisite Corpse

Can you write your own ending to the story that started below? For more parts, visit <http://www.read.gov/cfb/corpse.html>

A very unusual and completely amazing story pieced together out of so many parts that it is not possible to describe them all here so go ahead and just start reading...

This story starts with a train rushing through the night. The full moon lights the silver rails winding around dark mountains, through deep woods, and over steep gorges of jagged rock and one freezing cold rushing black mountain river.

I wish there was enough time to describe all of the funny (and touching) twists and turns – especially the Elephant Clown Party – that led up to now. But there isn't. Enough time. Because there is a ticking clock. And the two passengers we care most about don't know anything about it.

In a sleeping berth, in the third car from the end of the train, are two children, eleven- year-old twins, who have just run away from the circus.

The girl's name is Nancy. The boy's name is Joe.

They have no idea that those are not their true names. Though they will figure it out soon enough. Up until two hours ago, Nancy and Joe thought they were orphans. That turned out to be not true either. Joe holds up the "birthday card" that has suddenly changed their lives.

"This is not even in code! If our real Mom and Dad are such secret spies, wouldn't they have at least written in code?"
"Maybe they didn't have enough time," said Nancy.

Happy

PIECING TOGETHER THE EXQUISITE CORPSE.

Birthday.

LOVE, MOM & DAD

. . . gets right to the point. And there is this mark. The same mark we both have on our right little toe. Who else would know about that?"

Joe frowned. "But we don't really know if we are going to the right place. We don't really know if the Exquisite Corpse is the Top Secret Robot we are supposed to piece together. And we don't really know how to help."

Joe was right to be worried. But he was worried for all of the wrong reasons.

The note was from their real mom and dad. They were going to the right place. The Exquisite Corpse was a very Top Secret Robot that could only be assembled by them. And because they had been raised in a circus, Joe and Nancy had been perfectly trained for just this moment.

Fire juggling, trapeze flips, sharpshooting, bullwhip stunts, lock-picking, lion taming, bareback riding, knife throwing, snake charming, disappearing, sword swallowing, and other circus skills can come in handy in all sorts of situations.

What Joe should have been worried about was the clock – the first ticking clock. Oh, so much more to explain. So little time. Here, you will just have to piece things together yourself:

If the train makes it over the last treacherous gorge, there is a good chance that you and Nancy and Joe will have to deal with werewolves and mad scientists, real ninjas and fake vampires, one roller-skating baby, a talking pig, creatures from another planet (possibly another dimension), killer poetry, clues from classic children's books, two easy riddles, several bad knock knock jokes, plenty of explosions, a monkey disguised as a pirate, two meatballs, a blue plastic Star Wars lunch box (missing its matching thermos), three ticking clocks, and not just one bad guy – but a whole army of villains, cads, scalawags, sneaks, rats, varmints and swindlers. Also several desperados, a gang of evildoers, and one just plain bad egg.

And you-know-who will have to piece together the Exquisite Corpse...

Maps – Where Do You Live?

I wrote down some basic map concepts that will help you to understand more about maps and the map games that you play today.

Maps and globes: The globe is round. Why is a map flat?

Latitude and longitude: What does the grid on your map represent?

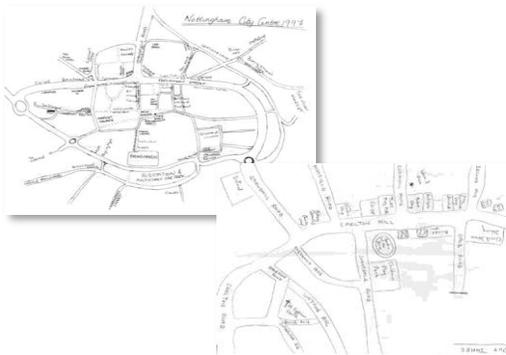

Map projections: Why do some maps look different? How are they made? What is a map scale?

Places and regions: Is my neighborhood part of a region? How are they different? What are state capitals?

Mental Maps

Humans memorize information about places, regions, paths, etc. in their brain. This information is used for daily tasks, e.g. finding the way to school from home or giving driving directions. Although nobody has seen how the information is organized and stored in the human brain, scientists talk about a "mental map".

A mental map can best be explained as a visual display, inside a person's head, showing where a person has traveled. A mental map shows what the person knows about the location and the uniqueness of a place.

Can you find all the words about back to school?

No mental map is alike. Every human has his or her own mental map. Ask your friends to make a sketch of the neighborhood you live in. Most likely all of the drawn "mental maps" will look different.
