PART V. Profile of services available in Atlantic Canada regarding preparation and shipment of remains.

Burial is the most common way of dealing with remains. Bodies must be buried in approved cemeteries. There are two methods of burial. The first is the traditional earth burial, in which the body is placed in a casket and lowered into the ground. The second involves permanently placing the body and the casket in a mausoleum, or tomb, above or just below the ground. Cemetery costs vary widely. Before you make an agreement ask for a written statement listing all costs.

1. Maximum Period Before Internment

Provincial health regulations contain no requirement for burial within a prescribed time, whether or not the body is embalmed.

2. Embalming

Embalming facilities exist and embalming is done in most cases. In most provinces, embalming must be authorized. In most provinces, embalming is not legally required; however, it may be required, when transferring remains by air or otherwise to another province or territory, or out of the country, unless embalming is contrary to religious beliefs. If the body is not embalmed, a hermetically sealed container must be used for shipment.

3. Cremation

Local laws permit cremation. The Province of Prince Edward Island has no facility for cremation and remains must be shipped to Nova Scotia for this purpose. Before you receive permission to have a body cremated, the body must be examined by a medical examiner and a Medical Certificate of Death signed by the attending physician. Funeral chapels and crematoria require that the body be enclosed in a container that is combustible, of rigid construction and equipped with handles. After a cremation, all that usually remains of the body is two to three kilograms of pulverized bone and ash, and perhaps some parts of artificial joints. These materials represent no health risk. You're free to take care of the ashes as you see fit. Most crematoria and funeral homes will provide temporary storage of the ashes until you decide what is to be done with them.

4. Caskets and Containers

Caskets and containers available locally meet the requirements for shipment out of the country. Hermetically sealed caskets are available. The price of a casket can easily range from a few hundred dollars for a cloth-covered casket to several thousand dollars for a metal or hardwood casket. You may have to ask to see less expensive caskets, since these are often not on display at funeral homes. Plywood caskets can usually be purchased on request.

5. Exportation of Remains

A permit is required for exportation of human remains. The undertaker obtains this permit from the Divisional Registrar of Deaths in his area, by presenting a certificate containing the personal particulars of the decedent and a report signed by the examining physician as to time and cause of death. The permit is similar to that issued when burial takes place locally. If the body is not embalmed, the undertaker's statement that the container is hermetically sealed must accompany the shipment. Ashes of a decedent can be sent by parcel post and there is no restriction on such shipment.

6. Costs

The cost of disposition in each case includes embalming, casket, outer case, moving, and service. All of the amounts indicated are in U.S. dollars.

The package may be insured at the rate of: $1.00 per $100.00 up to $1000.00
(There is no charge for the first $100.00 of insurance.)

The cost of preparing a body for shipment to the U.S. is approximately 2,500.00 (includes container and taxes).

However, the cost will also be determined by the dimensions of the container and the total weight of the container and remains. The average weight would be around 145 kilograms. Different airlines have different rates. Some airlines have a flat rate based on weight and not on destination. If this is the case there would be no difference in cost, no matter where the remains were being shipped in the U.S. Regulations can vary dependent upon transportation between provinces, or dependent upon from which country outside of Canada you are seeking to transport remains from. Usually, the funeral home handling the funeral service will arrange air transportation on your behalf if this is necessary.

All shipments must meet airline Goods Acceptance Process (GAP) and cut-off times for the shipment of human remains are generally between 2-4 hours prior to departure. A shipment will usually be cleared for collection 2+ hours after arrival. The funeral home will work with the receiving funeral home to make the necessary delivery and collection arrangement.

7. Exhumation and Shipment

Permission must be obtained from a provincial government official, the Divisional Medical Health Officer, for disinterment and removal of remains. Generally, the permission is granted automatically. Where the cause of death was an infectious disease, the Divisional Medical Health Officer may require a hermetically sealed container.

Costs involved would include the opening of the grave, the fee of the funeral director in removing the exhumed remains from the cemetery, and the cost of transport.

8. Autopsies

Autopsies are not routinely required. They are performed if requested by the family, if the reason of the death cannot be determined or it is suspicious. Families may refuse an autopsy for different reasons, religion or others. An autopsy must always be performed in the case of a murder.

9. Local Customs Regarding Funerals, Disposition of Remains, Mourning, Memorial Services

Local customs and procedures are virtually identical to those found in the United States.

10. Remarks

Once the death is registered, the death certificate is available from the Government of Canada Provincial Vital Statistics Branch in the province where the death occurred. In most cases the funeral director/home may provide guidance on this process. The cost for a Provincial death certificate varies from Province to Province and can be obtained from the Provincial Vital Statistics Branch. The information typically required to obtain a death certificate is as follows: name of deceased, date of death, place of death, spouse's name, date of birth of deceased, name of Funeral Home(if known), relationship to person named on certificate, reason why certificate is required, daytime phone number and return address.

Profile of services available in Saint-Pierre et Miquelon regarding preparation and shipment of remains.

Funeral

In France the family of the deceased person are legally obliged to follow their wishes. A funeral ceremony in France can be secular and conducted by a funeral director, or religious and take place at a place of worship. After a death, the family has up to six working days (not including weekends or public holidays) to decide whether the deceased should have a cremation or burial.

Cremation

If the body is to be cremated, authorization will need to be sought from the local mairie. It will usually take place at the local crematorium. Following the cremation, the urn is given to the family if requested, or the ashes can be scattered in the garden of remembrance (jardin de souvenirs). In France, it is legal to spread ashes on your own land, at sea or in a country environment such as woodlands or mountains, but it is not permitted to scatter ashes in a public places including rivers and paths. Cremations can still be a personal ceremony with speeches, music etc.

Burial

A burial can be organized by a funeral parlor or the immediate family of the deceased. A request for burial should be made as soon as possible following the death certificate. Once the death is registered, the mairie will issue a burial permit (permis d'inhumer) indicating the time and date of death. Burial may not take place in the 24 hours following the death. The mairie authorizes burial in the local cemetery. Alternatively, the deceased can be buried on their own land providing that certain criteria are met.
