

Senayit Zemenu Yhenew

Madam C.J. Walker is a luminous figure for African- Americans to pursue entrepreneurship and philanthropy. Her undefeatable nature did not allow her to set back from a spring to reach greater goals by the challenges she faced. Instead, she managed to turn the challenges to opportunities.

Madam C.J. Walker's career path inspires many African-Americans by showing entrepreneurship does not necessarily need to be pursued only when opportunities are offered, women can be an active participants in business and giving back to our community is part of the success that comes along with achieving our goals.

Madam C.J.Walker's is not the exact reference of empowering. She did not have the tools to turn her life around. She is not from a rich family nor was she well educated. Life for her brought nothing but challenges working as a laundress, having hair lice and scalp problem was just the tip of the ice burg to start to mention the struggles she faces. But who knew she could turn a problem such as that in to a multimillion dollar idea? None off course, But Madam C.J. Walker, rather than searching for ideas to work with else where she started from the issue she needed to be solved from herself. Therefore, no limits can be set on a person's path if one is determined to delimitate them.

Madam C.J.walker was a women working as a laundress as many other women of her generation were. They are an outcast from society and much was not expected to come out of them. But she surpassed every one opinion when she was able to beat the odds and established herself as independent, self-sufficient women. She led the very first national meeting that marked the beginning of black American women discussing about issues like business and commerce. Unlike many who would use personal success to benefit only themselves, Madam C.J. Walker showed that engaging in community and giving back to our society was also part of the entrepreneurship philanthropy journey. She funded many donations that could help black Americans to back out of the limited opportunities they are offered. She actively participated in society that she used to participate in parades to organized forgetting black Americans voices heard. She is also known for supporting the anti-lynching movement by giving large amount of donations.

All in all, Madam C.J. Walker was the gate opener for many who thought were not able to reach great height because of the limits that were set for them. Her legacy never fails to prove that challenges are things that we must overcome and use as our advantage. Women are not limited to being house managers but they can manage big business and become a voice of to the society .Helping out in our community is in reverse gaining satisfactions for ourselves by giving out the things we gained from it .As she says of there being no short cuts to success. Hard work should be combined with great intentions and good motives to become the best one can be.