

“The Cross-Cultural Dynamics of Ethiopia in the United States”

True realization of culture stretches across oceans, not left in one land to be silenced in another. As a university teacher in Ethiopia, I share with students not only my experiences from teaching in the U.S., but similarly, those educational encounters which have shaped me from Europe to Asia, the individual pieces making up the collective knowledge. For the Ethiopian Diaspora living in the States, they bring with them both a shared and individual history of their homeland, expressed through different avenues within the enclaves of Washington, D.C., Minnesota, and Los Angeles.

During my recent Summer vacation, I was able to meet with a former Public Affairs employee from the Embassy who now lives with her family in Southern California. Yeru is an educated and cultured individual who speaks highly of both her respective homes, from Addis to L.A., cognizant of the differences but understanding of the similarities. With a husband and son living with her in California and a daughter who still lives in Ethiopia, it was a pleasure to share stories from both countries, highlighting the cross-cultural commonalities which make up this dynamic global relationship.

On my own accord though, I took the opportunity one day to visit Little Ethiopia, a city block in the Fairfax District of Los Angeles which is more akin to Bole than to Beverly Hills. With cafes and shops next to restaurants and galleries, there is Amharic which lines the street, interrupted only by banners which espouse the cultural virtues to those who speak English. I stopped for a customary cup of Buna as well as taking some time to explore an art gallery. Speaking of the peculiarities of Arat Kilo while only a few miles away from Hollywood Boulevard was a bit surreal, yet the locals I visited with have respect for both entities, honored to be from Ethiopia but happy to call L.A. home.

Yeru’s husband and son have learned to combine one love which both countries respect, beer, starting an Ethiopian Craft Brewery, “Addis Brew”, in Southern California. With more Hops than its East African counterpart, St. George, yet still remaining true to the roots of Habisha taste, it was a treat to sample, reminding me of highlands of Ambo while at the same time able to visualize the setting Sun over the Pacific. Food and drink are perhaps the perfect representation of culture, and both Ethiopian and American flavors are captured in each bottle, a testament to the historic and global significance which can be shared around a table irrespective of location.

On the other end side of the world is the daughter, Christine, who chooses to support Ethiopia through her own personal involvement. Heavily immersed in both the art and poetry scene in Addis, she has ambitions to help the cultural aspects of visual representation and spoken word be paths of change within an East African context. Understanding the global power of art, she helps to foster ideas through innovative methods, moving past parameters set by others, instead focusing on empowerment through words.

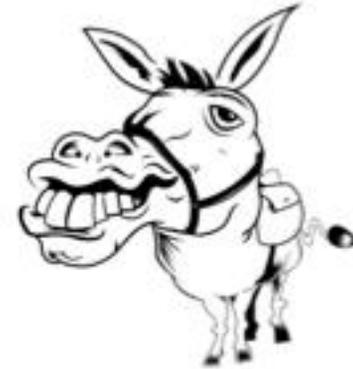

Within Los Angeles, Little Ethiopia is a single vibrant ingredient that adds to the multicultural flavors which make up the city. A place which fosters constructive discourse between people with vested interests in the direction of both Ethiopia and the U.S., it is a critical space which increases, never subtracting, from the metropolis in which it is situated. Personally, to be able to have a catalogue of experiences which adds context to cross-cultural understanding, I was grateful for the opportunity to see a little bit of Ethiopia in my hometown, and in turn, honored to be able to share my own culture through education back here in Addis...

Matthew Jellick is an English Language Fellow who taught last year at Ambo University and is now working at Dire Dawa University. He works closely with the amazing team in PAS for educational and cultural outreach across the Ethiopian landscape...

Tesfa Tours was set up in 2010 to take on the mantle of promoting the community tourism that has been developed in Ethiopia under Mark Chapman's guidance since 1999.

We believe community tourism means holidays that support local communities, but we also believe that holidays must give our guests a wonderful time.

We work closely with the communities, the guides and other stakeholders to ensure the success of this special 'project', which now involves over 20 communities serving food and hosting guests in both the Wollo (Lalibela) and Tigray areas.

Nanny Available mid-July/August

Saba has been with my family for almost two years. Since she it is only my twelve-year old daughter and me, she also cleaned and cooked for us. Saba has been an incredible help to us and has become an extension of our family. She is always punctual, incredibly hard working and has a positive, pro-active attitude. She is very trustworthy, as I have left her with my daughter in her charge at least one week per month while travelling for work and easily manages the household. She enjoys cooking and was responsible for shopping, cleaning and making evening meals. Saba worked in Lebanon for over two years and is comfortable cooking middle-eastern dishes as well as Italian and other western food. The house was always tidy, clothes were always impeccably washed and rarely did I need to tell her what needed to be done. Although she did multiple tasks for us, Saba would be happiest working as a nanny for younger children, which is what she did before she came to us. She has over 10 years of experience with American as well as Italian families as a nanny and caretaker. Her English is very good and she writes and reads English well. Saba lives in Kazanchis and would prefer to work in Bole, Kazanchis, Arat Kilo area. She has a young son in primary school and would prefer to work until 3-4pm. I highly recommend Saba.
