Last week, approximately 3,500 first-year and 377 international students arrived at Syracuse University (SU) to kick off the 2012-13 academic year. Syracuse Welcome, SU's orientation program, helped students get ready to start the new semester.

Chancellor Cantor and the Slutzker Center for International Services held a welcome reception honoring new international undergraduate students. Syracuse Welcome involves hundreds of student and staff volunteers who affectionately greet and assist incoming students as they arrive on campus. SU students known as the Goon Squad have been volunteering since the 1940s to make our new students feel part of the SU family.

New to SU is the Mix-It-Up Program, hosted by the Slutzker Center for International Services. This program is designed to embrace all groups on campus, providing them with a space for dialogue and opportunities to work together on fun projects. Participants have the opportunity to focus on identity, intercultural communication, and integration on the SU campus and in the city of Syracuse.
