U.S. Embassy sponsors special performance of A Raisin in the Sun for students

During the run of the Phoenix Players' production of the American theater classic A Raisin in the Sun, the U.S. Embassy hosted a special matinee performance of the play for an invited audience of university students. Following the show, Phoenix Players' Creative Director and the play's director George Mungai held a Question and Answer session with the audience to discuss his interpretation of Lorraine Hansberry's script. The students are members of drama clubs at several area universities and some studied the original play in their English literature classes. Questions from the audience focused on Mungai's adaption of the play to today's Kenyan, which was originally set in 1950s Chicago. Mungai proved that the play's theme of "what happens to dreams deferred" is universal.
