What the Consulate Can Do to Help

- Notify the next of kin, if they have not already been notified
- Explain local procedures and costs regarding cremation and/or repatriation of remains
- Work with the next of kin on the disposition of the decedent’s property in China
- Help with transfer of funds from the U.S., if needed
- Issue a Consular Report of Death Abroad (CRODA) to settle estates in the U.S.
- Produce a Mortuary Certificate for repatriation after embalmment, if needed
- Issue letters to the Chinese Embassy/Consulate to expedite a visa application, if next of kin will travel to People’s Republic of China
- Certify next of kin’s power of attorney for Chinese authorities, if needed.

What the Consulate Cannot Do

- Investigate any alleged crime
- Pay any hospital bills, cremation, repatriation costs or any outstanding debts
- Offer legal advice
- Negotiate with insurance companies

What You Can Do

- Report the death of a U.S. citizen to the Consulate, regardless of whether decedent was a resident or tourist in China.
- Locate the decedent’s will, if one exists
- Fill out and have notarized an “Affidavit of Next of Kin.” (See Steps for Obtaining Consular Report of Death Abroad (CRODA) on p.8)
- Decide whether to have an autopsy
- Decide whether to have a cremation or repatriation after embalmment
- Decide whether to use an expediter service (See Expediter Service on p.10)
- If not in China, give power of attorney to a relative, friend, employer or a funeral home in China in order to function as the next of kin’s legal representative and to take care of the decedent’s final affairs and settle the decedent’s estate in China. (See Steps for Obtaining Consular Report of Death Abroad (CRODA) on p.8)
- Contact a funeral home for help in carrying out funeral arrangements.
- Obtain a death report from the hospital, or from the police if the death happened outside a hospital.
- Obtain a foreigner’s death certificate if in Shanghai, by taking a police or hospital death report and the Affidavit of Next of Kin to the local Entry Exit Bureau. Anhui, Jiangsu, and Zhejiang provinces do not require this document.
- Obtain a Consular Report of Death Abroad (CRODA) at the U.S. Consulate. The CRODA is needed to settle estates in the U.S.
Information on Disposition of Remains

Autopsies (Post Mortems)
Autopsies are typically not conducted in China. If there is no specific cause of death from an autopsy, hospital or police report, the Chinese death certificate will list the cause of death as the generic term “sudden death.” Please note that this generic term can complicate any insurance claims. If the next of kin is not satisfied with the Chinese police or hospital report about the cause of death, or if the next of kin believes the death may be suspicious, they can request an autopsy. Autopsy requests must be submitted to the local Public Security Bureau (PSB) office. An autopsy generally delays the issuance of the death certificate, and thereby the Consular Report of Death Abroad, by approximately one month. Typically the next of kin will have to pay for the costs of an autopsy. The forensic center in Shanghai charges an estimated 30,000 CNY for an autopsy. If an autopsy is conducted, normally only small sections of the organs are removed.

Caskets and Containers
Both funeral homes and expediter services can provide coffins and iron casements for shipment. Customs and sanitation regulations of the People’s Republic of China require that the coffin’s casing be welded shut in the presence of sanitation officials before transporting the coffin. Containers for ashes are available from local funeral homes.

Cremation
Nearly every city and town in the consular district has at least one cremation facility. See list of Funeral Homes for more details. Cremation often happens within 15 days of death except in special circumstances, which include a request by the Consulate and the next of kin to permit the family to request an autopsy or an investigation of an unnatural death. Cremation will also be delayed if there is difficulty in contacting the next of kin or if the next of kin has not given specific instructions for the disposition of remains.

According to Chinese health and safety regulations, cremation is required if a person’s remains are to be interred in China. Typically, Chinese law does not allow for foreigners to be buried in China.

Normally the only document required for cremation in Shanghai is a foreigner’s death certificate, which the local Entry and Exit Bureau issues. To obtain a foreigner’s death certificate, one will need the decedent’s passport as well as a death report from the hospital, or from the police, if the decedent died outside a hospital. If the next of kin (or a legal representative via power of attorney) in China reports the death with EEB, he/she typically must present a notarized Affidavit of Next of Kin (See Steps for Obtaining Consular Report of Death Abroad (CRODA) on p.8).

For areas outside Shanghai, the funeral home will need a hospital death report, and a notarized copy of that report from a local Chinese notary public. In some cases, the funeral home may also need a death report issue by the local Public Security Bureau (PSB).
Embalming
Although most local funeral homes have refrigeration facilities, embalming is typically only available in larger cities in the Shanghai Consular District, including Shanghai, Nanjing, and Hangzhou. Funeral homes generally require that embalming take place within 30 days of death. In some cases, undertakers from funeral homes in larger cities are able to travel to other cities to transport remains for embalming.

The next of kin (or legal representative via power of attorney) can arrange embalming directly with the funeral home. The funeral home representative will manage all related matters including a report to the local Entry-Exit Bureau. Typically an officer from the airport Inspection and Quarantine Bureau will be present to supervise the embalming and sealing of the coffin at the funeral home.

Export of Cremated Remains
Cremated remains may be returned to the U.S. upon presentation of a death certificate and cremation certificate.

Export of Embalmed Remains
If a decedent is to return to the U.S., embalming must occur (See Embalming). After embalming, repatriation of the decedent to the U.S. will require the following documents:

- Encoffining Certificate of Entry/Exit of Coffin with Human Remains, issued by the funeral home
- Antiseptic Certification of Entry/Exit, issued by the funeral home
- Sanitary Supervision and Quarantine, issued by the funeral home
- Consular Report of Death Abroad (CRODA), issued by the U.S. Consulate
- Consular Mortuary Certificate, issued by the U.S. Consulate

A representative of the funeral home must bring the first three documents to the U.S. Consulate, where they will obtain the last two documents. All documents will be shipped back to the U.S. with the remains. Typically funeral homes in coordination with the airline will confirm arrival date and location for collection in the U.S. However, next of kin or a U.S. funeral home may wish to contact the U.S. office of the airline to proactively confirm availability.

Export of Exhumed Remains
In extraordinary circumstances, U.S. citizens’ remains which have been interred may be exhumed from a cemetery for repatriation. Next of kin must make the request to the cemetery administrative office and include documentation of ownership of the grave. Next of Kin will require permission from the Municipal Sanitary Inspection and Quarantine Bureau. Funeral homes can accept an exhumation request, and will require the U.S. Consulate’s certification. Cost of exhumation and export will depend on the condition of the remains.

Interment
In extraordinary circumstances, deceased U.S. citizens have been interred within certain parts of the People’s Republic of China. Typically, Chinese law does not allow for foreigners to be buried in People’s Republic of China.

Morgue
Typically within 8 hours, the hospital or police will inform the local funeral home to pick up a deceased person to take to the funeral home’s morgue. Hospitals and police in China typically do not have their own morgues and rely on the funeral home for this service. The decedent will be kept in the funeral home’s morgue until further instructions are given.

Unclaimed Remains
According to Chinese regulations, if a foreign citizen dies in China without family, employer or friends who can make arrangements for disposition of remains, the local Public Security Bureau (PSB) where the death occurred makes a report to the controlling provincial PSB. The provincial PSB will then send a diplomatic note to the U.S. Consulate requesting guidance on the disposition of remains within 30 days. If no reply is received or the reply is unclear, the provincial PSB will send a follow-up diplomatic note to the Consulate. If a reply is still not received, the provincial PSB will send a letter to the local funeral home asking them to cremate the body. The ashes will be kept by the funeral home for one year after cremation.
Cost Estimates

The Consulate has obtained the following cost estimates from two funeral homes in the Shanghai area, Long Hua Funeral Home (龙华殡仪馆) and Bao Xing Funeral Home (宝兴殡仪馆). Expeditor services, such as SOS International, typically provide an exact cost for shipping remains back to the U.S. only after they receive detailed information on the shipment. They can provide estimates for other services on a case-by-case basis. We provide the following costs as a service to assist families seeking assistance in navigating the process from the U.S. (See Disclaimer on p. 17).

Table 1 Shanghai Funeral Home Cost Estimates. All costs are estimates only as of September 2012. The exchange rate used is 1 USD = 6.3 CNY. Actual costs should be verified with the relevant funeral home or service.

Steps for Obtaining Consular Report of Death Abroad (CRODA)

1. Fill out and have notarized an Affidavit of Next of Kin. The next of kin makes decisions on arrangements and disposition of remains. If the next of kin is in China, they can take care of arrangements themselves.

2. If needed, execute a power of attorney. If next of kin is not in China, he or she can give power of attorney to a relative, friend, employer or a funeral home in China in order to function as the next of kin’s legal representative and to take care of the decedent’s final affairs and settle the decedent’s estate in China. Consulate staff members are unable to act as legal representatives. If needed, the U.S. Consulate can certify the power of attorney for the funeral home and other entities in the People’s Republic of China.

3. Obtain a hospital (or police) death report. Local hospitals require either the next of kin (or a legal representative via power of attorney) to sign documents and collect the local death report in person. If the death happened outside a hospital, next of kin (or legal representative via power of attorney) must collect the local death report in person from the police.

4. If in Shanghai, obtain a foreigner’s death report from the Entry-Exit Bureau (EEB). Next of kin (or a legal representative via power of attorney) can obtain the Report of the Death of a Foreigner from the Entry Exit Bureau in PuDong (See Useful Contacts on p.9). Remember to bring the decedent’s U.S. passport and the hospital death report. If the U.S. citizen has a Chinese marriage certificate, also bring the Chinese marriage certificate.

5. Make arrangements with the local funeral home. After arrangements have been made, the local funeral home will issue either a cremation certificate or three separate documents for embalming (See Export of Embalmed Remains on p.5). The funeral home typically will require the next of kin (or a legal representative via power of attorney) to sign the documents and be physically present to collect the documents.

6. Bring cremation/embalmment certificate(s), death report(s), and decedent’s U.S. passport to the consular section of U.S. Consulate General Shanghai. The next of kin (or a legal representative via power of attorney) should present these documents to the U.S. Consulate in person. A U.S. passport (or other photo I.D.) is required to enter the consulate. The U.S. Consulate can then issue 20 copies of the Consular Report of Death Abroad. If necessary, additionally copies are possible.

7. Obtain Consular Report of Death Abroad. Per the wishes of the next of kin’s, the CRODA and cancelled passport can be sent back with the remains, or picked up in person.
