

PRESS RELEASE

UNITED STATES EMBASSY IN MADRID

The United States Embassy participates in Expocomic December 11-13, 2015

Madrid, Spain – The U.S. Embassy will once again take part in the international comic fair Expocomic through a booth at the event. Visitors to the booth can meet Jonboy Meyers, an illustrator and comic artist based in San Francisco who has lectured at several public bilingual schools during this week.

But the U.S. Embassy booth won't be only about comics – it will showcase other opportunities for youth. Visitors to the Embassy booth will get free copies of booklets on American Geography, History or Literature as well as free DVDs of Trace Effects, an innovative and fun English language learning video game that follows a journey across time and the United States. Embassy staff and Education USA volunteers will offer students, parents and teachers useful information and advice regarding opportunities to go to the United States, including study abroad programs, internships, summer camps and summer travel-work programs. The booth will also feature inspiring videos of successful Spanish and American entrepreneurs who started their own businesses and found their own path to financial freedom and success.
