Providing Ties Outside of the United States

U.S. Immigration law states that every alien is presumed to be an intending immigrant until he/she establishes the contrary to the satisfaction of the consular officer, at the time of application for a non-immigrant visa (NIV), and the immigration officers, at the time of application for admission into the United States. The burden of proof is on the applicant. If an applicant does not meet this burden of proof to the satisfaction of the consular officer, then by law the alien is considered to be an applicant for immigrant status and should not receive a NIV.

Applicants can try to overcome this presumption by showing evidence of their family, economic and other social ties to a country outside the U.S. No relative, employer, or friend can “guarantee” an applicant’s return in place of such evidence. Regardless of who is sponsoring the trip, the consular officer must look at the applicant’s own situation to decide whether he or she meets these requirements. Under the law, the visa applicant has the burden of prove that he or she is qualified. Misrepresenting material facts will bar you from receiving a visa or entering the U.S. for the rest of your life.

Types of Evidence That Can Be Used: Family, social and professional circumstances vary greatly among applicants. Because each applicant’s situation is unique, it is difficult to say specifically what evidence of tires is likely to be convincing. The consular officer must make a decision based upon the information provided. As mentioned above, no documentation is required to be presented at an interview beyond the Confirmation page, passport, fee receipt, and for certain categories of applicants, forms issued by U.S. government agencies of schools in compliance with U.S. government requirements, such as the USCIS Form I-797 and I-129 for petition based applicants, or the I-20 or DS-2019 for students or exchange visitors. We do request that applicants bring prior passports, especially those containing prior U.S. visas issued within the past 15 years.
