Reading is a source of learning, teaching, culture, and of information, whatever the field. In our societies, its usefulness is the subject of several debates, and each person already has their own opinion. Thus some think that it can be a launch for a better future. To this effect, in what ways can reading contribute to a better future? The goal of our analysis will be to bring answers to this question.

In a time of globalization and modernization, to be cultured seems to be the only way to assure a better future. This culture is learned through reading.

First of all, reading is an effective and obvious way to learn. Indeed, “to read” is synonymous with the acquisition of knowledge and teaching, and this is in any field. It is true that each person has an opinion about the world but it is indisputable that through reading, we can learn more about history, nature politics...and especially international current events.

Next, reading also allows citizens to be socially aware. Indeed, written messages, texts about certain dangerous diseases, communications about employment offers...in newspapers can only reach those who are interested, meaning citizens, through reading. So, through reading, we can avoid certain diseases, get a job... Furthermore, reading plays the part of entertainer for the reader. Effectively, in the search of a better future, we shouldn't in any circumstance exclude entertainment because the future isn't simply work, but also entertainment. For this, newspapers, storybooks, science books, language books are obvious means of entertainment and this once again, through reading.

Coming to the end of our analysis about what reading brings for a better future, we can affirm that it is an important means in regard to its capacity to inform the readers of the ethical and fun part it plays. A better future needs to be cultivated so reading is a way for citizens to be informed on their society, their country, and the entire world. Reading brings knowledge but it all depends on the will of man and the importance that he gives reading. All the same, our concern is to know if we can't claim a better future when we don't know how to read.
