

Majuro Cooperative School of the Marshall Islands

On December 20, 2012, our entire school, from pre-school to high school, put away our red school uniforms and wore green and white, the school colors of Sandy Hook, to honor those little children and their teachers who lost their lives in that horrific, tragic event in Newtown, Connecticut. Even though we are half a world away and living on a tiny island in the Pacific, we felt the pain and hopelessness of the families and the community of Newtown and we all shed tears as we contemplated their shattered hearts. By our small gesture, we hope that this brings some comfort. We honor the innocence of those children and their families during this holiday season.

Please God, don't ever let this happen again.
